Mitchel De Certeau was one of the most creative intellectuals of the late 20th century. For him, the Christian call is to wander, to journey with no security apart from the story of Christ which is to be 'practiced' rather than objectively stated. This practice is profoundly disruptive of all systems. De Certeau characterized the whole Christian tradition as a 'way of proceeding' - not institutions, but movements or pilgrimage through all fixed 'places', especially locations of power. Christians must avoid the temptation to settle into definite places. Philip Sheldrake
